Well I am sure that now You are interested about the movie. Assessment of monoterpene volatile organic compound (VOC) emissions using a VOC sampling device. The volatile organic compound (VOC) emissions of a eucalyptus forest after multiple wind events were determined using a VOC sampling device that included a hydrophobic polytetrafluoroethylene (PTFE) tube with a nominal volume of 10 L placed on the ground approximately 1 m from the top of the tree crown. The VOC sampling device was tested in a wind tunnel in combination with a heated-plug flow dilution sampler and with three samplers that were placed inside the tree crown to simulate the air flowing through the tree canopy. The sampling device without placing the sampler inside the tree crown was also tested. None of the systems directly inside the tree crown could accurately simulate the VOC concentrations observed in the field due to limited air exchange between the tree crown and the environment. The PTFE tube with the heater and sampler inside the tree crown was the most accurate system. Hydrophobic VOC vapors were collected from the tree crown under simulated diurnal and nocturnal wind conditions and during non-rain events. Total VOC emissions on individual wind days ranged from 16 to 100 g m⁻². The VOC emissions for each wind day are presented in a different color-filled symbol to facilitate identification. VOC emissions in eucalyptus forests with a canopy area of 1 ha and trunk height of 3 m were up to 23.3 g m⁻² day⁻¹ and ranged between 1.3 and 7.3 g m⁻² hr⁻¹.
